To Whom It May Concern:

Christopher Watkins has been contracting to Vumii on various complex specialized projects over the last three years. Vumii is a high tech startup that makes laser-based night vision systems and precision situational awareness tools. Given Christopher's various background experiences in engineering, software development, physics, mathematics, hardware design, and image processing, he is an ideal choice to accomplish our most challenging developments.

Christopher has not only been engaged to implement ideas by our inventors in Israel, but also he has been brought on to bring new ideas to the company and implement his own patented work.

With his combined knowledge of hardware and software, Christopher is in a unique position to develop fast, efficient signal processing hardware regardless of the application or industry. Christopher possesses many strengths in this realm, including his attention to performance, speed, low-cost, tight code, and self-contained programs that do not require any unnecessary add-ons.

I would endorse strongly Christopher not only in this endeavor, but any technical challenge he puts his mind to solving.

Sincerely,
